Terrorists Badger Jews In Poland, Even Camp Survivors

When Jew, Herschel Furtski, recently arrived in Allied territory, he declared that a number of Jews have been killed in Poland since the end of the war. Furtski, a member of the underground in London, is conducting a campaign against the Jews in Poland and even against the survivors of the camps. He is reported to have been in the Lublin district, where he was seen by a group of terrorists. He is reported to have been in the Lublin district, where he was seen by a group of terrorists. that the Jews had killed a Polish child for "ritual purposes". This precipitated a pogrom which might have cost many Jewish lives if other Poles had not intervened. Before the pogrom, the Jews had been driven through the streets and beat them. The Lublin report said it was "obvious that all these incidents were carefully prepared and conducted by skilled hands trained in the school of the Gestapo." Dr. Derthimer, a Polish Jew in charge of the Jewish information office at the Dachau camp, was reported to have declared that the Poles in the camp are still actively anti-Semitic. As evidence of the situation, he revealed that when a Polish-Jewish group refused to leave Dachau for a camp where Poles were being concentrated, the Dachau commandant ruled that, under the circumstances, they could not be expelled to leave the camp. Hyman Yantian, head of the relief committee's unit, said the same situation exists in all camps. In the Albeck camp, he said, Jewish internees complained that Polish authorities suggested that the male Jewish internees leave the camp, with the women remaining, according to the Jewish Criterion, of Pittsburgh, Pa. According to Furtski, many Polish Jews have been found in various small camps around Lina, Austria, in the Soviet zone. The Russian military commission in (Continued on Page Four)

SEEKS RETURN OF FAMOUS PRESS

Hans Ullstein is attempting to regain possession of the great Ullstein publishing house which the Nazis seized in 1935 on the ground its owners were Jews. The Berlin firm had a pre-war value of about $4,000,000. The Nazis agreed to give 12,000,000 marks cash for the properties and goods at the time said Franz von Papen acted as middleman. The Ullstein plant was reported to be the largest in Europe. It published the Vossische Zeitung, the Morgenpost, Berliner Zeitung, Am Mittag, various trade papers, Germany's largest pictorial weekly, the Illustrierte Zeitung; various inexpensive books, patterns and maps. It operated a large travel bureau.

Anti-Jewish Slogans Used In British Election

Anti-Jewish literature and anti-Jewish catch-phrases were used by British Fascist groups to sway the electorate into voting for the Conservative candidates for Parliament in the forthcoming elections. The group headed by followers of Sir Oswald Mosley and his outlawed British Union of Fascists, smeared the windows of Jewish shops with tory slogans. They are also conducting a whispering campaign against Jews generally and Jewish refugees in England in particular. They painted the words "Perish Jewry" on the office windows of a Labor Party official who published a letter in a number of newspapers protesting against the activities of the Fascists.

Although conservative campaign groups have been active in the election, they have not announced their action nor repudiated their support. Much consternation was caused by the assertion in a campaign speech by Sir Wavell Wakefield, Conservative candidate in the West End district of Marlborough, that all refugees ought to be deported to their own homelands so that the homes they occupy might be available to the returning servicemen. Later, under the pressure by Conservative leaders who were flooded with protests, Sir Wavell issued a statement that he had referred only to refugees who had homelands to return to. He said "this obviously would not apply to people who do not have such homes and whose countries of origin might still be regarded as hostile or unwelcome."

Gang Wrecks Jewish Street In Philadelphia

A thorough investigation of vandalism in the South Philadelphia area by the so-called "West End Gang", whose anti-Semitic epithets in the course of their destruction outraged the decent citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., ordered by Judge James C. Cronin, of the Quarter Sessions Court. Judge Cronin, in finding one of the boys in the gang guilty on charges of "malicious mischief", ordered the county detectives assigned to the court to make a detailed investigation of the vandalism. That such outbreaks of violence and vandalism will not be tolerated was stated by the judge when he deferred sentence until the investigation was completed by the county detectives. The youth, who was 19 years old and had pleaded "not guilty", was already on parole and was returned to the county prison by the court. The gang swept down on the Eighth Street and Oregon Avenue area, primarily a Jewish neighborhood, and tore up pavements, wrecked a butcher shop, pulled out American flags on display, broke milk bottles and windows, and shouted vile anti-Semitic epithets at the alarmed residents. Although police at the time apprehended only one of the youths, the entire gang of eight boys was rounded up within 72 hours by Captain Gibbons and the staff of the Crime Prevention Association of the Bureau of Police, working in co-operation with the Philadelphia (Continued on Page Eight)

U.S. Chaplain Finds Museum Items Intact

When Major M. A. Brande, U.S. Seventh Army Jewish Chaplain, of Chicago, Illinois, reached the historic city of Worms, on the Rhine, he set out in search of the synagogue, built in 1034, and the famous Jewish Museum collection. He located the curator of the city museum and learned that the curator had hidden several of the items from the Nazis some years previous. He showed Major Brande to a hiding place in the Museum garden. There was the Rashi Chair, undamaged, and also undamaged were the 19th Century portraits from the men's synagogue. Then, taking Major Brande to the city hall, the curator showed the chaplain through several dark, dank sub-basement beneath the building to reach the spot where he had hidden the famous Machzor of 1272, in excellent condition except for a few worn holes in the parchment. The Letters of Patent and of Imperial Privilege dating from the 16th and 18th Centuries were there, also in remarkably fine condition.

"The curator did a wonderful job of preserving all that he could possibly hide of the collection", said Major Brande. "The items have been sent to Paris and placed in a vault awaiting a decision as to where they shall be placed for future safe-keeping."

Back at the synagogue, buried beneath several feet of debris, were boxes filled with scrolls, Torah crowns, and the Torah written in prison by Rabbi Meir of Rothenburg (better known as Maharam). There is an excavation crew clearing away the debris, and more items are expected to be found.

The foundations of the women's synagogue built in 1513 are still standing, and the mikvah (ritual bath for women), constructed in 1600, is still intact. It is estimated as far back as 1000.

In 1938, the Nazis had raised the synagogue and raised the synagogue museum which sheltered many rare and valuable items of significance to the Jewish faith (Continued on Page Four)

Over Million Jews Killed At Chelmno Camp In Five Years

At least 1,135,000 Jews were killed by the Germans in the Chelmno extermination camp between 1940, when the camp was established, and 1945, when the area in which the camp was located was liberated by the Red Army, according to an official report made public by the Polish Provisional Government in Warsaw following an investigation of German atrocities in the Posen district, where Chelmno is situated. The camp was established by the Germans in November of 1940. On December 9 the Gestapo brought over to the camp 700 Jews from the nearby town of Kolo. Immediately after their arrival the victims were placed in a detention centre, where they were undressed and subjected to unmentionable humiliation by their torturers. They were then placed in gas-filled hermetically sealed trucks and driven to a forest approximately three kilometers from Chelmno. When the sealed trucks were opened most of the victims were dead of asphyxiation. German soldiers removed the victims, dead and alive, and buried them in shallow graves. This procedure of wholesale murder was repeated by the Germans almost daily, until the very day the camp was seized by the Red Army. There were times when the Germans killed as many as 2,000 Jews daily.

Following are excerpts from the official report: "The Nazis built special warehouses to store clothing and other valuables stripped from those whom they murdered; the loot later was sent to Germany. The Chelmno commandant was Major Bothmann, his deputy was Lieut. Otto Lang and later, Plate Panschnik; Bohm was in charge of transportation; the man in charge of collecting the looted gold and valuables was Bristing; the medical officer was Hunge and Kietzchen; the financial administration was controlled by Neufeld, while a German named Langmeister was the camp physician. These Nazis organized special bri-

Noted Montreal Scientist Gets Grant

Two grants of $18,000 each have been made by the Sugar Research Foundation to two of the Dominion's leading research workers, Dr. Hans Selye, associate professor of histology at McGill University, and Dr. I. M. Rabinowitch, associate professor of medicine at McGill, for support of research work in Montreal. Dr. Rabinowitch's grant is for investigation of the use of sugar in human nutrition in health and disease. These grants bring to more than $300,000 which the foundation has earmarked in support of studies of new industrial uses of sugar and to further explore the nutritional values of sugar. Coincident with the announcement of the grants to the two Montreal scientists, the Montreal General Hospital, where Dr. Rabinowitch is director of the department of metabolism, announced that a committee for research had been established under the chairmanship of Dr. G. E. Hodge.

Hospital authorities, in expressing their appreciation of the grant from the Sugar Research Foundation to Dr. Rabinowitch, stated that "the day has passed when a large general hospital could feel that it was performing its duty towards the public merely by proper treatment of the sick. It is to research work in such hospitals that the medical profession and the general public now look to a very great extent for advancement of knowledge of disease and improved methods of treatment. That is why laboratories of large hospitals now occupy buildings and not rooms."

Dr. Selye is widely recognized for his studies in the field of endocrinology. He recently returned from Russia where he was the delegate of the Royal Society of Canada at the 225th anniversary meeting of the Russian Academy of Science.

In acknowledging the grant, he stated that the funds placed at his disposal by the Sugar Research Foundation in connection with studies of high fat diets in the course of diabetes of adaptation, such diseases including such common complaints as gastric ulcers, joint diseases and heart disease due to stress and strain.

Dr. Rabinowitch's studies rest on a lengthy tradition of achievement. His clinic for diabetes is the largest in Canada. As a result of the high carbohydrate-low calorie diet he reported in 1930, diabetes today are receiving much more liberal quantities of sugar in their diets than in former years.

How these diabetics are able to utilize such large quantities of sugar without the aid of insulin, in the majority of cases, and possible applications of this knowledge to use of sugars in nutrition in general, are parts of the investigation which the foundation grant will make possible.

this district, he disclosed, is commanded by a Jewish major. One thousand Polish Jews, about half of whom are women, are in the Mauthausen camp. In general, Hungarian and Rumanian Jewish deportees have been repatriated by the Soviet authorities, but the Poles and Jews of several other nationalities remain.

A Capt. DiGiacomo of the U.S. Military Government told Purzicki that he planned ultimately to place all Jews in "sterile" camps, one of which has already been established at Friesenberg, just outside of Linz. Some 500 Polish Jews, all of whom wish to emigrate to Palestine, are presently in the Leodding camp, five kilometers from Linz. Purzicki also reported on the number of Jews in the large cities of Poland. These include Greek, Hungarian and Czech Jews deported to Poland by the Nazis. He said that there were 2,500 in Warsaw; 5,000 in Lodz; 3,500 in Cracow; 4,000 in Czestochowa and 2,000 in Lublin.

Detailed information concerning the fate of Greek and Hungarian Jews deported by the Germans has also been obtained by the relief committee. A report said that 65 Greek Jews, housed at present in Ebensee, are the remnants of 48,000 sent to Auschwitz from March to June 1944. An estimated 45,000 were exterminated there.

Of the remaining 2,000, about 1,000 were sent to Warsaw in March, 1944, and most of the others are presumed to be dead. About 100 were sent to the city of Wola, in Austria, of whom the 65 at Ebensee are the survivors. About 500 were sent to Mauthausen, and eventually to Ebensee where 197 of them died. Of the 1,000 sent to Warsaw, 300 to 400 were later sent to Dachau. The Greek Jews are concerned that their government has done nothing to repatriate them, the report stressed.

Concerning the Italian Jews the report said that two transports, including Jews from Rome, are known to have arrived in Auschwitz and were immediately gassed, with few being spared. At Bratislava, 500 Jews from Trieste arrived at the end of January, 1944. Most of them were elderly. Those who were not gassed died from exposure within two months after their arrival. The information concerning the Italian Jews, and the Greek Jews, was obtained from eye-witnesses who were confined in the Auschwitz and Birkenau camps.

MONTREAL MEETINGS

● Cpl. Sydney Solomons, R.C.A.F., 4200 de Bullion Street, returned home on a recent trip of the Ile de France from overseas, wearing the red Combined Operations badge (wings, rifle and anchor), having gone ashore in Normandy immediately after the start of the invasion with the R.A.F. Commandos to help service aircraft on the first landing strips set up on the invasion coast. Cpl. Solomons joined the R.A.F. in 1939 shortly after the outbreak of war after going on his own to the United Kingdom. He began training for aircrew, but was discovered to be color blind, and was posted as a "rigger" with the R.A.F. Shortly after Dunkirk he was injured at his station in Yorkshire during a bombing raid, and, suffering from concussion, he was sent to Canada, where he was posted to an R.A.F. station at Kingston. He returned overseas in 1943, to receive his Combined Operations training. After a week in Normandy, his outfit was returned to England, where he was transferred to the R.C.A.F. At the end of hostilities in England he was with the transport squadron, sponsored by the city of Ottawa, Ont. Cpl. Solomons is married to the former Miss Beatrice Bellier. He is a son of Mrs. A. Kachman, Wilderhurst Avenue.

● HOSPITAL OF HOPE: Dime booklets are being distributed for the next annual luncheon of the United Head of the United Nations, President of the Canadian Jewish Relief Committee and Chairman of the Canadian Committee of National Service Employees' Representatives.

and civilization in Europe. Swastikas, Nazi party flags, helmets, and other fitting tributes to the Nazi determination to exterminate everything Jewish in Germany lay scattered in the debris and around the nearby graveyard.

The graves and tombstones of Rabbi Meir of Rothenburg and the man who redeemed Maharam's body, Alexander Ben Solomon of Frankfurt, remain upright against the centuries and Nazism.

Unfortunately, the store of six hundred Torah bands which gave the stitched names and birth dates of generations of Worms Jews have been lost and possibly destroyed. But so much more than was hoped for has already been found that much of the color and historical interest of the Worms synagogue will return with the end of the war and a restoration of features which haven't been too badly damaged.

gades of enslaved workers whose job it was to make powder out of human bones; the powder was then taken to the village of Zawadzka, on the Warta River near Kolo where it was used in building retaining walls.

"Jews, working in the camp's forced-labor brigades were shackled day and night. Men and women, who had been forced to sort out clothing for shipment to Germany, were often made to jump out of their third-floor workroom windows. In this way some were killed and others maimed, all to provide 'spare' for the Nazi guards.

"Many were the tragedies which the fire of Chelmno crematoria consumed. One man, working at the ovens there, recognized one of the victims as his own sister, who was still alive despite her trip in the poison-gas truck. Struck with horror he refused to put his sister into the oven. German guards swung their whips. The man threw himself at the guards, and they shot him.

"When the Red Army reached the camp, they found the bodies of 15 murdered Jews lying at the entrance to the camp reception center. As the Red Army approached, the Nazis made frantic efforts to speed up their mass murders; for days, according to people of the neighborhood, the smoke and smell of burning bodies hung like a pall over the countryside. But, as the Russians approached, the Nazis fled, first dynam-by Cantor Nathan Mendelson. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a long ivory satin dress, with a sweetheart neckline edged with self-shirring, a fitted bodice, with long sleeves coming to points over the wrists, and a full skirt fashioned into a long train. Her long flowing veil of illusion tulle was held in place by a coronet of pearls and orange blossoms, and her cascade bouquet of white and pink carnations was centred with an orchid. Miss Claire Saxe, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, wearing a white tulle gown, embellished with dusty-pink velvet flowers, and cut with a square neckline, fitted bodice, and full skirt. Her matching coronet head-dress held a shoulder-length veil, and she carried a Colonial bouquet of pastel roses and sweet peas. L.A.C. Simon Harris, R.C.A.P., of Moncton, N.B., brother of the groom, was best man. Mixed flowers and ferns, with candelabra and standards of flowers, formed the decorations, and the tables were decorated with flowers. The bride's table held the wedding cake, with candelabra, and centre-pieces of peonies and carnations. An orchestra played the wedding music, and during the dinner. The bride's mother, Mrs. Saxe, received, wearing a street-length dress of aquamarine-blue, studded with seed pearls, with a matching hat and gloves, and a corsage of American Beauty roses; with the groom's mother, Mrs. Harris, in a pearl-gray street-length dress, with a lace yoke, and matching flowered hat and gloves, and a corsage of American Beauty roses. The bride couple left on a Saguenay cruise, the bride travelling in a lime-colored soft wood suit, with a fuchsia-colored blouse and hat, black accessories, and a fuchsia-colored topcoat. From out-of-town were: Mr. and Mrs. J. Saxe, Mr. and Mrs. H. Saxe, Mr. and Mrs. E. Caplan, of Ottawa, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. E. Abramsky, of Kingston, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. N. Rubin, and Mrs. F. Wagner, of Halifax, N.S.; and Mrs. Ethel Cotsen, of New York.

A Packet Of Mail

By Mrs. Irving M. Engel, Chairman,
 Service To Foreign Born, National Council of Jewish Women

Along with the many tales of American valor and high-hearted courage that have come from the battlefields of the world are the stories of superlative tenderness and humane consideration displayed by America's fighting men in their relations with the suffering, down-trodden people whom they have liberated. It is one of the brightest pages of contemporary history, for it proves that a citizen army — such as America's — must not necessarily lose touch with humanity in the process of becoming efficiently militarized.

Battle-weary warriors never have been too tired to listen to the tales of suffering and privation of the fortunate few who have escaped the gas chambers of Dachau, Buchenwald, Bergen-Belsen and the other Nazi concentration camps. Many of our soldiers in the midst of personal rigors and sorrows, have shared their rations with friendless unknowns; they have also served as "one-man social agencies" in their endeavors to aid the homeless wanderers.

Serving as the American contact for many of these "one-man social agencies" has been the Service to Foreign Born Department of the National Council of Jewish Women, 1519 Broadway, New York. Both in letters sent direct to Council, and in others referred to Council by chaplains and field workers of the Jewish Welfare Board, Council has played its traditional role in repatriating Americans with long-lost relatives abroad. This is a part of its location service which, during the past fifteen months, has received 17,132 requests for aid in bringing together relatives who have completely lost touch with each other in the wake of more than a decade of Nazism and the utter confusion of war.

Top man of Council's soldier "one-man agency" in the field is an officer, a former refugee, who has spent every moment he could spare from his army duties in searching for members of his own family. Though he has been unsuccessful in locating his own relatives, his initiative, plus the Council's follow-up in the United States, has brought joy to the hearts of many who then have been enabled to locate missing relatives.

In one French town, this officer found four Jewish children who had been sheltered at great risk by a Catholic family throughout the Nazi occupation. He forwarded to Council details concerning the youngsters who fortunately were old enough to remember their names and other vital facts. A search, initiated by Council, revealed the parents to have been killed or held as missing. Council, however, located relatives in this country and became the instrument by which the children were brought home.

Continuing his personal quest through concentration camps in Germany and Austria, this officer — who must be numerous — eventually made his way to Czechoslovakia. There, from the town of Terebenitz, he wrote:

"I have found no living member of my own family. They had been taken out of Germany and I succeeded in tracing them to Theresienstadt. There they were kept for a week in September, 1944 and were moved with a group to Poland. They were never heard of again. Recently, a few, thought dead, returned from concentration camps in Poland. They say that each people and there were great and burned to death. . . . Exact records of people now in Theresienstadt now are being kept, but all previous files were destroyed by the Germans in their flight from the Russians."

Accompanying this tragic note from the site of one of the best known Nazi concentration camps was a package containing one hundred letters written on various oddments of stationery, some in envelopes carefully sealed, others on post cards, many on pieces of scrap paper which were then carefully folded and addressed. Word had spread that an American was in town and the officer, despite the heart-breaking outcome of his mission, patiently waited until the collection was complete, then sent it on its errand of mercy.

It was only last week that Council received these hundred letters written in German, Hungarian, Jewish, Polish and Czechoslovakian. They have already been translated and steps have been taken to locate the American relatives to whom they were addressed. Many of the addresses, of course, are old; some of the names incorrectly spelled. But already, one letter has been delivered to a Mrs. Martha Frank, the first word she has heard from her sister Selma in three years.

Starting off with, "I hope you have received one of my messages telling you that I am alive," the letter went on to inform Mrs. Frank that both her mother and mother-in-law were dead; that her sister Elise had not been heard from since "she was deported from Frankfurt in June, 1942, probably to the neighborhood of Lublin."

From Mrs. Frank, the story was placed together. She and her husband had arrived in this country in 1939. Arrangements were made shortly after for the immigration to this country of Elise, her mother and mother-in-law, and Selma, the writer of the letter. But with immigration visas cleared, the war intervened . . . and death and separation became the lot of still another Jewish family.

Other soldiers, too, have written to Council, as country after country was freed. Describing the plight of displaced and destitute Jews unable to find families or relatives, they ask could Council help find the missing people? Or locate relatives or friends in the United States who might aid these helpless victims?

Many requests come from service men and women, who, fleeing the Hitler regime, lost contact with parents, sisters, brothers — sometimes wives or children. Each letter tells its own heartbreaking story. For example, a U. S. Army private wrote from Germany just before V-E Day:

"England find an application blank which I hope will help to locate my parents, my brothers and other relatives whom I left in Stuttgart, Germany in 1941. Please let me know as soon as you hear anything for I am thinking of my parents day and night. Excuse the handwriting and the stationery but I am writing this in a dug-out with the help of a flashlight."

From a servicewoman stationed with the Middle East Force of the British Auxiliary Territorial Service:

"Another service girl told me about your organization and I thought perhaps you could help me. I have lost my parents, thanks to Hitler, and I have only one relative left. He is the brother of my mother. He was born in Poland and emigrated to the United States

Sidney Hollander, head of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, who addressed the annual meeting of the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Toronto, is always worth listening to attentively for what he has to say on an expert in the field of social service, as an observer, and as an analyst of the Jewish community. Therefore, although his speech was too long to publish, some of the things he said should be available to readers of the Review for the purpose of stirring thought and inspiring discussion, and this column will touch on them here:

The toughest job a Welfare Fund has to do is to transmute the loyalties that people have for separate agencies into loyalty toward the whole community. One of the best ways to break down isolationism and make a genuine federation out of constituent agencies is through community-wide representation on the board. Every important group should be included, for no Welfare Fund has a chance as long as it is the personal possession of a few. There should be a good number of women on the board because of the increasing part they play in campaigns and because of the understanding of human values that they bring to offset the financial approach. In this era of change, the critical outlook and the fresh point of view which are needed suggest that the average age of board members should be kept down. Labor knows what welfare services should be and therefore ought to be represented. There should not be too many rich men on the board.

Mr. Hollander had hardly got started when he made these suggestions and yet there is enough in them in the way of courteous common sense and food for thought to require an imported rather than a home-grown speaker to put them across. They sound innocent enough on the surface but if you look at them for a few seconds you will see that it is just as well that he had transportation for points south when he made them and did not have to come back to live in Canada.

From the kind of Welfare Fund Board the Jewish community should have, the speaker went on to its major responsibilities. The first, of course, is fund-raising. It was Mr. Hollander's supposition that the Toronto community was taking advantage of the present prosperous days to build operating reserves and capital funds for rough days ahead when contributions may be less generous. In step with the general tendency to correct skimping in local needs in order to divert every possible dollar to Europe and Palestine. The home front has to be sound if for no better reason than to be helpful elsewhere.

Mr. Hollander was frankly critical of the number of separate campaigns being run in addition to major fund-raising efforts. Right now there is one for a hospital and another for the Aged Home, each being conducted by the respective agency itself. The work these agencies do is, or should be, closely related. Separate campaigns tend to maintain a separatism that should be avoided. As a Zionist Mr. Hollander felt that separate campaigns for Palestine were not only a waste of time, money, and manpower but acted to drive Palestine apart from the rest of Jewish life.

After fund-raising comes budgeting which, among Jews, is so often smothered up with partisanship. Budget committees therefore have to resist pressure. Mr. Hollander finds that the Christians do a far better job than the Jews where this aspect is concerned. They are more temperate and understanding so that the National War Fund in the United States was developed in an orderly way in sharp contrast to the hostilities and partisanship that shattered the United Jewish Appeal. The Christian pattern, approached from the viewpoint of the community as a whole, engenders good will. The Jewish pattern, approached from the agency point of view, engenders only bitterness. To correct a situation that is growing increasingly more dangerous, Jews must take the position that the communities are partners, not simply boys on a cash register.

Communities that have been holding down salaries for social workers to a point where it is difficult to get and hold good ones, hand out vast sums to outside agencies with only the most superficial investigation, although when they conduct a campaign they give an implied pledge that the money will be wisely spent. Beyond this and beyond willing and generous giving is the re-about twenty years ago. I think he lives in New York. He speaks Polish and Yiddish and he must be about 55 years of age.

"I realize that these particulars are not very much help. But I would be very grateful if you could try to trace him as I have nobody else."

Council's answer to this plaintive request, as it is to thousands of others, reads: "We are in receipt of your letter and are doing everything in our power to find your relative." These simple phrases set in motion a search for the missing person which extends throughout the forty-eight states and into all corners of the world, including enemy territory where information may be obtained through the underground or the Red Cross.

The search keeps up until a definite report can be made. In this country, Council is able to conduct its search in various parts of the nation through its 300 Sections which have a membership of 60,000 women. Abroad, it works through corresponding agencies which were established as soon as each country was liberated. Since V-E Day, the rate of successful location has been greatly accelerated.

A few weeks ago, Council received a message from a soldier acknowledging a service given five years ago. It was written by an American officer who found a couple and a male companion in Zell am See in Austria. The three, he said, have been "fortunate enough to come out of this mess alive and now are being cared for by the American Army." The couple asked him to get in touch with the Council worker who had contacted them five or six years ago.

At that time Council contacted two women in Cleveland and put into operation plans to bring the Americans to America. "In the meantime," continued the letter, "the Nazis had come into their lives and upon the carrying-out of these plans. The man has had almost all of his papers but showed me a paper from the American Embassy in Berlin dated May, 1940 which allotted him a number as an emigrant No. At any rate, he says you had done much of the work in his behalf."

The common experience of the liberated trio had made them inseparable companions and they are anxious to come to the United States together, the captain wrote. Asking Council again to contact the Cleveland relatives in their behalf, he continued, "I am of the opinion that their health is good. They are all 37 years of age, they are expert tailors now serving American troops here and would be quite adaptable to America."

responsibility to go back of words and pictures and see what is behind.

After fund-raising and budgeting comes planning, an assignment that calls for an open mind. Public welfare agencies are causing a change in services provided by private agencies such as Welfare Funds.

Orphanages are on the way out and the emphasis is on child-guidance clinics, foster homes, and skilled family agencies are occupied primarily with cases of mental illness that have little relation to income. More thought is given to the health and recreational needs of the aged and providing of foster homes for them when they can live out of institutions. In Mr. Hollander's home city of Baltimore, a service with regard to Jewish education was found to be lacking, with subsidies being given to unmodern schools. Yeshivas, all separate units were brought together under federal direction, and, as a by-product, salaries were raised and the community is no longer ashamed to look the Jewish teachers in the face.

Stocktaking, which is as much needed in charity as in business, means facing the painful necessity of putting some agencies out of their misery and burying some of those causes which the community is lagging around.

Hospitals are now viewed as the core of the whole health program of the community, acting as the auxiliary service of the family agencies, home for the aged, children's agency, and for the chronically ill. The recreational program teams up with cultural courses, Young Men's and Young Women's Association and other groups and helps to knit the community together that way.

Another factor in planning for the future is to broaden the acceptance of Welfare Fund services so that they will be available to and availed of by all who need them, which means the poor. Originally these services were something the rich bought for the poor. Fortunately, the supply of poor is running out. Others, as well, should know of the ability of trained social workers to adjust difficulties between parent and child, between husband and wife, between neighbor and neighbor, since these problems are not the monopoly of the poor.

Twenty communities in the States have established a consultation service for a fee and confidential services are available at quarters removed from welfare quarters. However, as such a project the social workers, whether serving rich or poor, should be of the necessary high professional calibre claimed by the Welfare Fund. Today, especially, when every community is bidding for social workers, that means adequate salaries as a beginning point.

The Welfare Fund has responsibility for publicity, to keep the people informed of what their dollars provide and to give them a feeling of pride and participation. Most people know nothing about the organized charity they support. Federations must plan for continuous stimulation of interest. Many communities think of publicity only in view of a new appeal. Then comes the boy of tricks: the meetings, the dinners, the barrage of publicity, teams of carping, score-boards, thermometers, balloons, and speeches. This column takes a rich pleasure in this public game. It has always maintained that the people should know more, and all the year around, to make such cheap dances unnecessary or at least a very minor part. Any publicity which must resort to cheap methods is nothing more than a waste of time and the pocketbook of the Jew.

Externally, the thing that portends Jews is anti-Semitism. For the past decade its purpose has been to reduce the second-class citizenship and to limit their opportunities. Threat thrives on insecurity and is rooted in the fears that come from bad economic and social conditions. It will not be enough, Mr. Hollander believes, for Jews to look to their protective agencies for help because there is not much Congress and local boards can do. The future for Jews depends on factors beyond their grasp, such as employment, wages, homes, health, and protection for all the people around them.

"I trust your well-known efforts in behalf of unfortunate Jews throughout the world will be extended to those three. They send grateful thanks for your previous help."

Reactions brought about by Council workers are full of drama, pathos and, of course, great joy. One ecstatic note came from a Norwegian-born soldier, now stationed in China, whom Council had informed that his mother had escaped to safety in Sweden.

"When I received your most welcome letter," he wrote, "I was so happy that I thought I would burst crying with joy. I always said and I still say that you people are the finest on earth."

"Last night I wrote a letter to my mother. To tell you the truth, I had almost forgotten what it feels like to have a mother. It seems I had already gotten used to being all alone without having anyone to worry about me. I wonder how I can ever repay you for all your kindness and the precious time you put at the service of us 'foreign born'."

Printed by Council is the letter written during the past Passover holidays by a sergeant with the American forces then stationed in Persia who sent this acknowledgment:

"I am more grateful than I can say for your V-letter giving me the address of my mother with whom I last touch in 1939. Now I am writing letters to my relatives directly and I hope to get answers. I hope you receive as much satisfaction from your important activity in behalf of our exiled people as do those you help. I wish you a happy Passover and Shalom. Council's activities in Persia, the resending of families, is a heart-warming and soul-stirring work. It is the first step in the solution of the problems of millions of persons displaced by the war. With information as to the whereabouts of one's own ones, the way is open for sending food, clothing and other help relatives abroad. In some cases, it is possible to institute immigration proceedings that will eventually result in reuniting a separated family. In any case, relocation effected brings peace and contentment to the families involved, for nothing we all know is worse than the fear of the unknown, the ever-dawning specter about loved ones.

Through our two hundred and one hundred Jewish Section Council offers a location service as well as an immigration service, all persons, regardless of race, color or creed. If you have such problems, get in touch with your local Section of Council, write to the Service to Foreign Born, National Council of Jewish Women, 1519 Broadway, New York City.
